NEW YORK, October 5, 2005

Laurion Capital Management LP a multi-strategy hedge fund has gone live with the Execta™ Portfolio Management and Trade Execution Platform from Tethys Technology, Inc.

The Execta Platform is the most powerful and flexible broker-neutral electronic trading and portfolio management solution available today. The multi-asset class platform includes modules for investment and trading strategy simulation, as well as automated and manual trade execution and optimal strategy determination analysis. Execta functionality also includes automated trade opportunity detection, pre-trade, real-time and post-trade transaction cost analysis, portfolio and risk management. Clients use the Platform for Direct Market Access (DMA) and broker-assisted execution. Users are able to leverage Tethys' industry-leading pre-packaged algorithms, route orders to broker algorithmic trading desks and develop and test their own proprietary algorithms.

“Laurion chose Execta for its breadth of asset-class and global coverage, industry-leading message and data processing capabilities and the overall platform flexibility. Execta allowed Laurion to go live simultaneously in the U.S., European and Japanese equities and futures markets. In addition, Execta also offers the ability to trade options globally.” said Khosrow Dahi, Ph.D., the Chief Technology Officer at Laurion Capital Management. “We took advantage of Execta’s open API to fully automate our investment strategy in a very aggressive time frame with complete control over our trade-execution.”

“We are pleased to have Laurion as our client. They are a sophisticated firm with deep understanding of markets and technology.” said Nitin Gambhir, president of Tethys about Laurion. “Tethys is committed to providing leading-edge analytics and technology to our clients.”
